Hearing Health Care Directory

Introduction

Iowa's Early Hearing Detection and Intervention (EHDI) program works to ensure that all newborns and toddlers with hearing loss are: 1) identified as early as possible, and 2) provided with timely and appropriate audiological services, education, medical intervention and family support. This directory is intended to serve as a resource for both parents and professionals in locating a variety of pediatric audiology and hearing aid dispensing providers throughout Iowa. This directory is available on the Iowa EHDI Web site, www.idph.state.ia.us/iaehdi/default.asp and will be updated on a regular basis.

Audiologists, hearing aid dispensers, and ear, nose, and throat doctors were invited to be listed in this directory. All providers who responded and provide pediatric hearing health care services to children have been included in this directory. The information listed was provided by each provider. A listing in this directory does not imply the endorsement of the providers who were included in the directory by the Iowa EHDI program. In addition, the EHDI program is not responsible for the information listed since it was provided by each facility.

The directory is arranged in alphabetical order by county and then by facility name. There is also an index provided at the end of the directory to assist you in locating a particular provider. If you do not find a particular provider, they may not have completed the survey to be included in this directory. Due to constant changes in medical insurance and types of services offered, please verify the provider meets your needs before scheduling appointments. You may also want to make sure your child is covered for the services/procedures by your insurance prior to scheduling the appointment.

We hope this directory will assist you in locating appropriate pediatric hearing health care providers throughout the state so that children receive timely follow up and intervention, as needed. Another great resource for families of a child who is deaf or hard of hearing is Iowa's Early Hearing Detection and Intervention Program Family Resource Guide available on the Iowa Early Hearing Detection and Intervention Web site, www.idph.state.ia.us/iaehdi/default.asp. Click on the parents or professionals page. The guide is intended to serve as the first step in your journey toward understanding your child's hearing loss and the resources available for your child and family.

Acknowledgement

We wish to acknowledge the New Jersey Early Hearing Detection and Intervention (NJ EHDI) Program who generously permitted the use of their provider questionnaire and NJ EHDI Pediatric Hearing Health Care Directory for creation of the Iowa directory.

Pediatric hearing health care providers who wish to be included in a later publishing may contact the Iowa EHDI coordinator at (800) 383-3826.

Glossary

Glossary

Automated auditory brainstem response (AABR): Band-aid like electrodes are placed on the baby's head to detect responses. Sounds (soft clicking) are played in the baby's ears. This test measures how the hearing nerve responds to sounds and can identify babies who have a hearing loss.

ABR Evaluation (Diagnostic): Auditory Brainstem Response measure used to predict hearing sensitivity and to assess the integrity of the auditory nerve and auditory brainstem structures. Other terms used include brainstem auditory evoked potential (BAEP, and brainstem auditory evoked response (BAER). Conventional ABR devices generate waveforms that the audiologist then interprets to determine the presence, type and configuration of a hearing loss.

Acoustic Reflex (Testing):

(Measurement of) the reflexive contraction of the intra-aural muscles in response to loud sound, dominated by the stapedius muscle in humans.

American Sign Language: ASL is a visual and manual language made up of signs created with the hands, facial expressions, and body posture and movement. ASL conveys ideas, information, and emotion with as much range, complexity, and versatility as spoken languages and is considered to be the essential link to Deaf Culture among the American Deaf community.

Assistive Listening Device (ALD): Hearing instrument or class of hearing instruments, usually with a remote microphone for improving signal-to-noise ratio, including FM system, personal amplifiers, telephone amplifiers, television listeners.

Audiological Evaluation (Diagnostic Audiometry): Measurement of hearing to determine the nature and degree of hearing loss.

Audiologist: Healthcare professional who is credentialed in the practice of audiology to provide a comprehensive array of services related to prevention, evaluation and rehabilitation of hearing loss and its associated communication disorders.

Auditory Nerve: Cranial Nerve VIII, consisting of a vestibular and cochlear branch.

Auditory Neuropathy: A condition in which patients demonstrate normal otoacoustic emissions (suggesting normal outer hair cell function of the cochlea) and absent or grossly abnormal ABRs (suggesting a neural disorder)

Auditory Steady State Response (ASSR): Auditory Steady State Response (ASSR) is an objective test used for evaluation of hearing ability in children too young for traditional audiometric testing. The results obtained from ASSR testing can be used to estimate the behavioral pure-tone audiogram. Often, testing is performed under sedation or in natural sleep if the person is under 6 months of age. Results are obtained by measuring brain activity while the person listens to tones of varying frequency (pitch) and intensity (loudness). The brain activity is recorded using electrodes taped on the forehead and behind each ear. The results are detected objectively using statistical formulas that determine the presence or absence of a true response. Threshold is determined as the lowest level at each frequency at which a response is present.

Bone Anchored Hearing Aid (BAHA): Surgically implanted bone-conduction receiver that interfaces with an external amplifier, designed to provide amplification for those with intractable middle ear disorders.

Bone Conduction: The transmission of sound through the bones of the skull to the inner ear. Bone conduction is completed using a bone oscillator (vibrator) that is placed on the mastoid bone behind the ear or on the forehead.

Click: A rapid onset, short duration, broad-band sound produced by delivering an electrical pulse to a transducer.

Cochlea: Auditory portion of the inner ear, consisting of fluid-filled membranous channels within a spiral canal around a central core.

Cochlear Implant: Device that enables persons with a profound hearing loss to perceive sound, consisting of an electrode array surgically implanted in the cochlea, which delivers electrical signals to the auditory nerve and an external amplifier, which activates the electrode.

Earmold: Coupler formed to fit into the auricle that channels sound from the earhook of a hearing aid into the ear canal.

Genetic Counseling: The educational process that helps individuals, couples, or families to understand genetic information and issues that may have an impact on them. It helps them comprehend the diagnosis, prognosis, recurrence risks and reproductive choices to make the best possible adjustment to the condition.

Hearing Aid: Any electronic device designed to amplify and deliver sound to the ear, consisting of a microphone, amplifier, and receiver.

Hearing Aid Dispenser: A hearing aid dispenser is someone who is licensed by the state to measure hearing and to fit and sell hearing aids.

Hearing Screening (Identification Audiometry): Testing designed to screen the hearing of large numbers of individuals, such as neonates and school age children, with the goal of identifying those who need more comprehensive audiologic assessment.

Otoacoustic emissions (OAE): A miniature earphone and microphone are placed in the ear, sounds are played and a response is measured. If a baby hears normally, an echo is reflected back into the ear canal and measured by the microphone. When a baby has a hearing loss, no echo can be measured on the OAE test.

Otolaryngologist (ENT Physician): Physician specializing in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of the ear nose and throat, including diseases of related structures of the head and neck.

Pediatric Audiology: Audiology subspecialty devoted to the study, evaluation and treatment of hearing disorders in children.

Play Audiometry: Behavioral method of hearing assessment of young children in which the correct identification of a signal presentation is rewarded with the opportunity to engage in any of several play oriented activities.

Pure Tone Audiometry: Measurement of hearing sensitivity threshold to pure tone stimuli by air and bone conduction.

Real Ear Measurement: A test technique used to measure the sound levels in the ear canal produced by a hearing aid which is accomplished by placing a probe microphone in the ear canal alongside the hearing aid.

Sign Language Interpreters (Qualified): Sign Language/spoken English interpreters are highly skilled professionals. They must be able to listen to another person's words, inflections and intent and simultaneously render them into the visual language of signs using the mode of communication preferred by the Deaf consumer. The interpreter must also be able to comprehend the signs, inflections and intent of the Deaf consumer and simultaneously speak them in articulate, appropriate English. They must understand the cultures in which they work and apply that knowledge to promote effective cross-cultural communications. The Americans with Disabilities Act requires the provision of qualified interpreters in a variety of settings. It states that "To satisfy this requirement, the interpreter must have the proven ability to effectively communicate..." One important measure of an interpreter's proven ability is professional credentials. Credentials are obtained by taking and passing an assessment of an individual's interpreting skills. The National Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf (RID) provides testing for national certification. Assessments by the National Association for the Deaf (NAD) and other state agencies may also be accepted by employers. (Citation: The Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf website).

Sound field testing: In pediatric audiometry of hearing aid fitting, the determination of hearing sensitivity or speech recognition ability made with signals presented in a sound field through loudspeakers.

Speech Audiometry: Measurement of the hearing of speech signals; includes measurement of speech awareness, speech reception, word and sentence recognition, sensitized speech processing and dichotic listening.

Speech Language Pathologist: A professional who evaluates and provides treatment for speech, language, cognitive-communication, and swallowing problems of children and adults.

Tympanometry: Procedure used in the assessment of middle ear function in which the immittance (energy flow) of the tympanic membrane and middle ear is measured as air pressure delivered to the ear canal is varied.

Tympanometry (High Frequency): The development of multi-frequency tympanometry devices has made it possible to record tympanograms across a wide range of probe-tone frequencies. Several studies indicate that the most informative tympanometric recordings in neonates are derived using higher probe tone frequencies (1000 Hz) and are the best predictors of the presence of non-compliant middle ear system.

Visual Reinforcement Audiometry (VRA): Audiometric technique used in pediatric assessment in which a correct response to signal presentation, such as a head turn toward the speaker, is rewarded by the activation of a light or lighted toy.
